It is thus in no sense a treatise. Because of the limited time allotted to the subjects of sound and light in the present distribution of studies at the Academy, the problem of arranging a fundamental course of sufficient strength, to be something more than popular, and yet to be mastered within the allotted time, has been somewhat perplexing. The basis of this arrangement is necessarily the mathematical attainments of the class for which the course is intended. In this respect, the class has completed the study of elementary Mathematics, as far as to include the Calculus, and has had a four months study of the application of pure Mathematics, in a course of Analytical Mechanics. With these elements to govern, this text-book has been designed for a seven weeks course, including advance and review. The fact of being able, through the discipline of the Academy, to exact of each student a certain number of hours of hard study on each lesson, is of course an important element necessary to be stated.
