ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY. Abdomen (continued). PHYSIOLOGY Of Digestion, Digestive Organs. GLANDULAR SYSTEM. REPRODUCTIVE ORGANS. STING. The digestive and reproductive organs, which occupy the chief space of the abdominal cavity, are, for the most part, fairly open to ordinary observation. Though we may derive the greatest assistance from the labours of preceding anatomists in displaying the details of their structure, yet, in this investigation, we do not find ourselves at once entirely beyond our own resources. And we shall need to take much less on the faith of others dissections here than in the last chapter. The Digestive Organs of Insects deal with the same kind of substances as do those of the higher animals. Their food is reducible to the same classes of aliment, animal or vegetable, nitrogenous or nonnitrogenous, and the same chemical principles are at work in all...
