Agriculture - The demand of the miners and difficulties of transportation in early days soon led to the establishment of agriculture. The dryness of the climate made Irrigation Imperative and caused more scientific methods of farming to be followed than is usually found in the Middle States: Science and Industry have so triumphed over unfavorable conditions, that now the agricultural product of the state almost exceeds the output of its mines. The main agricultural area is along the Platte and Arkansas rivers, the San I ails valley and on the western slope. The soil, In general, is a sandy loam, varied in...
