John Reginald Christie was a prolific serial killer active in England during the 1940s and 1950s. He lured women to his flat under the guise of assisting them with some medical procedure such as abortion and strangled and raped them; oftentimes while they were unconscious or dead, thus giving rise to allegations that he was a necrophiliac. Christie also likely framed his neighbor Timothy Evans for the death of Evans wife and infant daughter for which Evans was convicted and hanged.
