I have spent much time on the hills in the compiling of this work, but there are certain days which live in the memory with singular vividness. For instance, a friend and I once passed a night at an eagle s eyrie far up a lonely glen, in the hope of being able to photograph the mother bird with the first rays of the sun. Perhaps the most interesting days of my experience have been spent at the summer haunts of the snow bunting, often at a height of over feet above sea level, where a snow fall may be looked for during any month of the twelve. On one occasion I penetrated to the nesting haunt of the snow bunting at dead of night - guided...
