POWER BOAT HAND BOOK (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Power Boat Hand Book Our engine, since starting, has been well throttled down, as there is really no use having it race away, wearing itself out for nothing, besides the shake and jar on the boat. Before putting in the clutch we speed up just a little; just enough not to stall the motor and then press in the clutch. Don't jam it in. Just press it up to the point where a little more effort will make it take hold and lock. We carefully steer out between the other boats and head for our black buoy, just in time to meet another boat coming in. We pass the black buoy to starboard (our right side; as buoys have no port nor starboard, we must learn that the term pass to starboard, or pass to port, refers to the boat's side and not the buoy's) and head full speed for the lighthouse some couple of miles away. Now if we only had a chart aboard we could learn just how near that light we could go, whether the bottom was soft or rocky, whether the light was a white light or a red light. The paint on a lighthouse of course does not tell us the color of the light, but nevertheless if we had the Government book aboard called the Light List we would find this lighthouse is described...
