Excerpt from The University of Utopia: An Address Delivered at the Commencement of the Ohio State University June 25, 1890 Mr. President, Gentlemen of the Board of Trustees, Members of the University, Ladies and Gentlemen: The subject which has been announced for me this morning may at first sight seem to some of you to be somewhat out of the way; if any such, however, will but reflect a moment, they will, I trust, perceive that it is in reality the one theme to which I am practically confined; indeed, instead of my choosing it, it may be said to have chosen me. This is a university occasion, and Columbus is, in a limited sense (I confess that the limits are rather narrow as yet), a university town. I come from a place that is a university, morning, noon, and night, for six days in the week, and where we go to a university chapel on Sundays: my business has been with universities for the last twenty years, and I must be called a university man, if for no other reason, at least by the method of exclusion; if I am to pay any attention to the sound old maxim, Ne sutor ultra crepidam, I am, as you see, as restricted in the choice of my subject as was Mrs. Bardell of glorious memory in the selection of a lodger. Of a university, therefore, shall my speech be made. But of what university shall I speak? About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
