The One World Religion of money has been captivating the world since the first contracts of law came into existence in the second millenium BCE which sought to bring order to this new found trade. Wealth, barter, and the precursors of money and law were beginning to become formalized within civil society. Soon thereafter, these law codes formalized the role of money in civil society. The new contractual law set amounts of interest on debt. They enacted fines for wrongdoing. They also began the practice of compensation in the form of money for various infractions of law. As the lines between civil society, religion and money blurred throughout the coming ages, money began to hold prominence within every facet of our lives. It was not good enough to pay homage to our gods through deeds and prayer, the paying of penance with material goods and money became a standard religious teaching and practice within the newly formed world religions. Today, there are no world religions immune from the influence of money, power and the corruption that they behold. Today, the world is lost in the grip of money and power within every facet of our society. Political decisions of our leaders are based upon contributions and earnings of the company stocks they hold. Our so-called religious leaders stand on the pulpit and talk of the ancient religious theories of the dangers of money, prosperity and material wealth while getting rich themselves on contributions and product sales to conflicted congregations. It is hard to turn on the news and not see the influence of money as our society verates the wealthy and famous above all. From the time we start our...
