The following is of interest, being from a letter written by Hahnemann, wherein he gives a specimen of the examination to which he would subject a Homoeopathic candidate: Dear: I have much pleasure in making your acquaintance, and agreeable to your desire, I put to you some questions, from your answers to which I shall be able to judge of your capability to practice Homoeopathically and to cure patients of all sorts. i. What course does the true (Homoeopathic) physician pursue in order to obtain a knowledge of what is morbid, consequently of what he has to cure in the patient 2. Why does a name of a disease not suffice to instruct the physician as to what he has to do in order to cure the patient For example, why should he not at once give Chinchona bark when the patient says he has got fever (as the Allopath does) 3. How does the true physician learn what each medicine is useful for, and consequently in what morbid states it can be serviceable and curative 4. Why does the true physician view with horror the prescribing of several medicinal substances mingled together in one prescription for a disease 5. Why does it shock the true physician to see blood drawn from a patient, whether by venesection, or leeches, or cupping-glasses 268 HAHNEMANN'S EXAMINATION IN HOMCEOPATHY. 6. Why is it an abomination for the true physician to see Opium given by...
