AN UNACADEMICAL PROCEEDING. Un sujet comique. MOLIERE. The bursar of St. Peters College having finished his matutinal meal--Anglice, his breakfast--sat contemplating a parchmentcovered book, about a yard and a half long by ten inches wide, which Promus, the college butler, had just brought in to be cast up and checked, when a loud rap at his door roused him from his unpleasant contempla-, tions. He was in hopes some would respond to his come in, who would justify him in postponing a task which he detested, and always shuffled off to the last moment. As the door opened, and a middle-aged gentleman appeared, holding by the arm, as tightly as if he was afraid he would give him the slip, a much younger gentleman, who, judging from corresponding form and feature, was evidently my son, sir, the bursar said, Promus, you must...
