Thus the groups Peronams (Chili, Peru), Pleuropyrigus (Galapagos) and Plicolumna (Lower California) are very similar in their narrow, long contour, and were formerly brought together; but a study of the apical whorls shows that each of these groups is a special parallel modification of different Bulimulus stocks of ordinary form inhabiting each of these regions, and it becomes clear that they are totally independent and unrelated groups, with an origin and past history different in each case. Again, an adequate study of specimens will, in my opinion, convince conchologists that the similarity in appearance between Chili-Peruvian and northern Mexican forms of the B.protem, erythrostomus, schiedeanus and montezuma groups, is not evidence of close relationship but merely of similar environments. It is unnecessary in this place to multiply instances of such parallelism in the Bulimi. Primary divisions of...
