Excerpt: .with his odour. the colossus and administered a couple of slaps on the bronze face. What an ineffaceable disgrace and indignity, for which we may well blush even now! But mark the unsullied glory and consolation of the deeds that atone for it. In defence of her violated territory our France, drained of her life blood, surrenders her last offspring, a handful of peasants, very young and very poor, almost all married, snatched pitifully from their home, their wives, and the lowly contentment of their native fields. They were nicknamed Marie-Louises. And the Marie-Louises were sublime. They scarcely knew how to sit a horse, and General Delort said of them, I think the authorities have gone crazy to expect me to charge with such cavalry as this! Nevertheless they swept across Montereau like a torrent, overthrowing the Austrian battalions who were massed in the streets. They scarcely knew how to load a gun; but at Bar-sur-Aube, one against four, they defended the woods of Levigny with nothing but their bayonets; and at Craonne they held out for three hours on the crest of the plateau within close range of the enemies batteries, the grape-shot from which mowed down six hundred and fifty men out of nine hundred and twenty. With no overcoats, in eight degrees of frost, and badly shod, they marched through the snow, went without food, and still kept up their spirits. There are glorious pages, too, about the National Guards in...
