Excerpt: . . . part of the ship - that being deeper in the water forward, she might steer the better. We had very stormy weather, which is rare in these lati- tudes. Saw the same tunnies. Fine weather, but sometimes squally, prevailed on the 29. We saw some frigate-birds, and a white bird, with wings marked with grey. At sun-set, we saw a ship to windward, steering the same course as we. We enjoyed a fine fresh wind and beautiful the 30. The air cooler. We saw the ship we had seen last night, a little to windward. She had crouted sail; we did the like; she hoisted English colours, we ours. We caught tunnies, and saw flying-fish. THE SEA AND FISHES. A MORE dismal sight than the main sea is scarcely to be seen. A man becomes presently impatient of being in the centre of a...
