Excerpt: .only danger in this method of working is that the oxygen must be turned on carefully, as otherwise it may be blown round into the mains, and thus extinguish the light at the jet, and form, into the bargain, a pleasant surprise for the next person who attempts to light the gas in another part of the house; but with care this cannot happen. Using ordinary coal gas alone as an illuminant, we have used an Argand burner with fair success, but found it not so good as a Welsbach flame, which is a Bunsen flame playing upon the interior of a cap made of cotton fibre netted and coated with a mixture of metallic salts, chiefly oxide of zirconium. We have also at a press used a common fish-tail burner screwed into the position of the nozzle of the mixingjet. this device being...
