At Ouastah two of my Arabs, natives of that village, landed to pay a visit to their relations, who all came PARTING scnms. 265 out--father, mother, sister, and brother--to meet and welcome them home. After a short stay, they returned to the kandjia, accompanied by their whole family. There was a remarkable likeness to each other in them all. The brother who remained with his parents, while the others sought their fortunes in Cairo, brought me a present of dried dates; the old man took me by the hand, and, recommending his sons to my care, conjured me to be kind to them when we should be out of Egypt; while the mother and sister were silent, and stood apart, endeavouring to hide their tears behind their hoods. Indeed, the young men were worthy of their affection; being patient, industrious,...
