Not illustrated. 1850 Excerpt: . . . of the Southern States, who, being about to take up some worthless land, with a view of passing it off as being of a superior quality to what it really was, stuck down some twigs of black walnut, hickory, oak, dogwood, and c. , intending thereby to represent them as the natural growth of the soil. The sticking of these twigs down was intended to cheat the purchaser. A similar use is made of the prayer book of 1786, to cheat the societies by representing all that was done by the Conference of 1784 as being done in accordance with Mr. Wesleys counsel and recommendation, and when it was done, as meeting with his entire approbation. It was for this purpose, and for this alone, we solemnly believe that the prayer book of 1786 was printed; and the publication of it by Dr. Coke...
