Excerpt from A Vindication of Colleges and College Endowments: An Inaugural Address Delivered in the Chapel of Morrison College, November 2, 1840 Friends and Fellow-Citizens: We have assembled in this hall under circumstances of no ordinary interest. After having assisted, in the earlier part of the day, at the dedication to the interests of Medical Science, of the spacious and elegant edifice erected by the munificence of the City Council, you have now convened to witness the induction of a new Faculty into the department of the Liberal Arts and Sciences. To this new organization your eyes are directed, not without anxiety - perhaps, after so many unsuccessful experiments, not without reasonable fears - for resuscitating the long buried glory of Transylvania, and restoring her pristine honors. On our parts, we take office with a full sense of the responsibility we are incurring, and of the difficulties which we may have to meet. From that responsibility we do not shrink; those difficulties we trust to surmount, through the almost invincible power of a resolute purpose, and the favoring smiles of a benignant Providence. That there are formidable prejudices to be encountered we are not unaware, but from the very circumstance that seems to render them so formidable, their being old and deeply rooted, we draw encouragement. Were these prejudices of late growth we might more justly tremble. But surely it would be most unfair to make us suffer for mistakes of which we are innocent, or to hold us accountable for errors in which we had no participation. It may be truly said, that there never was an organization so totally disconnected in every way with those that have preceded it. There is...
