They were, and still today - at the dawn of the 21st century - many are those who, driven by political-economic ideas of Marxist thought, advocated and recommend the end of capitalism. Or is advocated, and recommend that, following a dynamic process material and/or naturally dialectic of history, the political society would be capitalist and/or will also, of course, incorporated by civil society, giving rise to a society dictated perfect, without classes, in which all men excluded, in it, finally would be free of injustices and/or social inequalities. What is evident, however, is that, historically, capitalism, in spite of going through many crises and by also being a political system whose economic your class and/or social group has, by nature, as a principle, disaggregate more members of that exactly aggregate, he always maintained its hegemony. That is, he (capitalism), contrary to the Marxist theses on your supposed order, on the other hand, according to the already first analyzes political-economic of Italian Antonio Gramsci, from the 20th century, also brought with him the call Hegemony, making it with that -...
