Excerpt: . executing that instrument, he instructed the defendant to pay his indebtedness to one James Fleming, to McCaul and Rigncy and to one Coverton. and also to pay one Nugent $25; and that the defendant is entitled to charge against such balance the amount actually paid or allowed to those persons by the defendant in cash or in kind at its fair value. He claims that the instrument of 9th May, 1898, was in truth executed with identically the same object and for the same purpose as and in substitution for exhibit No. 1, and to carry out its intent, ---and this is obviously true no matter with what intention lo. 1 was executed--and that exhibit No. 1 was to have been destroyed or cancelled--and I also find this last mentioned fact to be true. He also claims that there is a balance coming...
