Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. 150 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.3in. The statutory courses in pharmacology are becoming more and more and rightly the stepping-stone between physiology and the initiation of the student into clinical study. It follows as a logical corollary that dosage, pharmacopoeial preparations of drugs and the rest of materia medica should be left to impress themselves on the student's mind during his clinical work. Any attempt to make the student memorise doses, preparations and so forth, before he enters the wards, can only mean that his memory becomes crammed with a mass of comparatively meaningless facts, forgotten as quickly as they are absorbed. If the acquisition of this knowledge is left to take care of itself the student, as a rule, automatically picks up a good working idea of the comparative toxicity of the more important drugs during his course in pharmacology: the rest sinks in equally automatically during his clinical studies. Knowledge so acquired is retained far better than that which is picked up parrot-fashion. The usual garnishings of materia medica, therefore, have purposely been omitted from this book: the official doses are given under the various drugs, and under the head, pharmacopoeial preparations, is given a brief outline of the general characters of the official preparations. I am indebted to Dr. L. N. Chley for valuable help in reading proofs. D. C. Cambridge. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
