Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Function and Needs of Schools of Education in Universities and Colleges Historically, as early as the end of the sixteenth century, Richard Mulcaster, an English schoolmaster, is found pleading for a College of Traine and asking the pointed question: Why should not leaders be well provided for to continue their whole life in school, as Divines, Lawyers, and Physicians do in their several professions? Germany led the way by founding the first pedagogical seminary in 1619 at Kothen under Ratich. This foundation gave birth to the normal school development on the continent of Europe, and later to the establishment of chairs in seminaries within universities for the systematic study of educational problems. In Germany, as later in America, the need for the training of elementary teachers first suggested professional training and our first normal schools, established in Massachusetts and New York in 1839, were founded in response to an outside demand to satisfy this need and to the fact, then becoming evident, that a new and vigorous nation had been born and must be...
