Excerpt from The Willow Creek District, Alaska Although the expeditions of 1898 yielded valuable contributions to knowledge of the general geology of the area tributary to Cook Inlet, Mendenhall's report was the only one which in any close way touched the Willow Creek district. His route lay from Knik up the broad lowland bordered on the north by the Talkeetna Mountains and on the south by Knik Arm and Matanuska River, and although his map indicates a part of the Little Susitna Valley, he gained no information concerning the bedrock geology until he had passed to the east of this district. In 1902 A. H. Brooks made a trip from Tyonek, on the west shore of Cook Inlet, up Skwentna River and along the northwest slope of the Alaska Range and mapped the geology along his route, but on this expedition he gained no knowledge of the east side of the Susitna basin. The next expedition to this vicinity was made in 1905, when G. C. Martin spent about three weeks in a study of the coal of the lower Matanuska Valley. His geologic map included a portion of the Little Susitna basin. In 1906 T. G. Cerdine and R. H. Sargent carried a reconnaissance survey around the Talkeetna Mountains, and Sidney Paige and Adolph Knopf mapped the geology of the area surveyed. Their geologic map covered the Willow Creek district, but the small scale of the map and the hasty manner in which the field work was necessarily done imposed sharp limitations upon the amount of detail that could be presented. Although Paige spent only a few days in the Willow Creek district, in that short...
