Confessions of a Metropolitan Opera Singer is the autobiography of Kathleen Howard, a Metropolitan Opera star from 1916 through 1928. Turning to film acting after her voice broke, Kathleen Howard was also an accomplished writer who served on the staff of Harpers Bazaar. She made her first movie appearance, appropriately cast as an Italian grande dame, in Death Takes a Holiday. Generations of W. C. Fields fans have doted upon Howards full-blooded portrayals of Fields virago wife in Its a Gift and The Man on the Flying Trapeze. Toning down her screen mannerisms a bit, Kathleen Howard spent her last decade in films in such supporting roles. Confessions of a Metropolitan Opera Singer provides a great overview of what life was like for a Metropolitan Opera star in the early 1900s, and remains a fascinating read. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
