Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from On Blendings of Synonymous or Cognate Expressions in English: A Contribution to the Study of Contamination This unpretending work should be looked upon chiefly as a collection of materials. I do not pretend to have made any great scientific discoveries. Much of what I mention has also been observed by others. Some of my quotations I have borrowed, in some cases without being able to verify them. It goes without saying that the examples are of great importance in a work of this kind. The collecting and arranging are perhaps my chief merits. I have had to work with many interruptions, in hours of leisure, and during most of the time even without access to a library. A long and very serious illness, which even after my recovering prevents me from working with any great energy, and the necessity of bringing my work to an end within a fixed time have obliged me to refrain from my original plan of composition. Referring, on that subject, to 79 - 82, I need hardly say anything more to explain the purpose and to apologize for the shortcomings of my work. The nature of my task, so laborious and difficult, will, I hope, account for many of my errors. My list of works consulted does not contain all the numerous works used, but chiefly those quoted in abbreviations, which are, I hope, easy to understand.
