Excerpt from Toward the Development of a County Employment Projection System for the State of Illinois, June 1975: A Report to the Illinois Environmental Protection Agency Division of Air Pollution Control The vast majority of the employment step-down models resembles the set of models used for the population component of this study. While these models, and simple variations of them, have been utilized in a large number of studies, the research reported here represents the first time that a sizable family of models has been applied to one region. Hence, the analysis takes on a further dimension of interest in that results obtained from each model are directly comparable since the same data base was used. The results, however, are by no means encouraging in the context of scientific acceptability: none of the models provided estimates that were within acceptable limits or consistent over sets of counties or industrial sectors. This is one particular area in which additional research would appear to be mandatory. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
