Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from A Manual for High Schools, Vol. 1 The recent growth of high schools in New Jersey, as well as elsewhere, has been rapid, almost phenomenal. Ten years ago the number of approved high schools in the State was sixty-seven. Now there are one hundred and thirty-six such schools. The number of pupils enrolled in the high schools in 1906 was 14,690. The number this year is upwards of 50,000. At present, one in every fifty-eight persons in the State is a high school pupil. Ten years ago one in every one hundred and fifty persons in the State was a high school pupil. These facts indicate the growing importance of the high school in the educational system of the State. They also point to the necessity of intelligence and effort on the part of State and local authorities to make the high school a more useful institution. To make it more useful, the range of studies or activities should be diversified enough to meet the varying needs of the youth of the State who have...
