IN writing of the theatre of our time he who would choose such a title might fairly be suspected of irony, for in what theatre in England or the English-speaking world shall joy be found? Yet a sturdy hope weaves the two words into one sentence on the threshold of a book that they may meet again in men s minds and in due course, bring the things themselves together. Men create everything in their own image, and always get exactly what they deserve, neither more nor less. The sins of the fathers are visited upon the children in art as in everything else, and the English nation deserves the English theatre. That, however, is no reason why such a theatre should be endured, and there are signs that it will not much longer be suffered to continue unchanged. All over the world it is being discovered that what was good enough for the fathers is not good enough for the children, and a generation is springing into manhood which demands the right to examine its heritage and to discard everything that it finds to be worthless, useless and injurious. This generation is discovering that it is possible to rebel against the sins of its forbears and it is rebelling with all its might. If in the delighted excitement of the struggle it rebels also against their virtues, experience will bring wisdom and keener perception, and the very violence of the revolt will clear the air and leave the next generation and the next and the next more free for constructive action. Meanwhile there has been and is perception enough to see that the life of men...
