I had the satisfaction of firing a few shots at them, with what effect I do not know, but two or three of their balls came whistling quite near my head. Our two pieces of cannon shelled a very large mill on the opposite side of the river. The rebels used to get in there and fire out of the windows: it made a very good fort, the main part being of stone, and about six feet thick at the bottom. We could not set it on fire with shell, so five men went over in a boat and burnt it; it made a splendid fire. These dams are built across the Potomac, and raise the river so that it fills the canal; if they should break this dam it would let the water down some ten or twelve feet, and of course stop navigation on the canal. Well, I have smelt gunpowder, and been under fire, and roughed it with the army long enough to judge a little what a soldiers life is, and certainly it is a hard one, yet I think I can stand it, and must say I like it pretty well. I have seen many of the regiments in Bankss Division, but none equal...
