Excerpt: . . . chapter ix. self-regarding virtues. 1. In chap. 3 we noticed the difficulty of defining Wisdom from the point of view adopted in the present treatise: because Wisdom is the faculty and habit of choosing the best means to the best ends, and in different methods of Ethics different ends are regarded as absolutely best. As (e. g. ) in Egoistic Hedonism (cf. Book iii. ) the end of Self-love is so regarded: whereas according to the present method Self-interest (or what may appear such) must always give way to Duty. Still, within the limits fixed by other duties, Common Sense considers that Self-love is naturally authoritative over other impulses: and that it is a duty to seek our own happiness, except in so far as we are prohibited by strict rules of morality, or can promote the welfare of others by sacrificing it. There...
