The Pentecostal movement in China began when the first missionaries arrived in China in 1907. Almost immediately they put down roots in at least three places which later strongly influenced the development of Chinese Pentecostalism. These were Hong Kong, Hebei province, and Shanghai. Pentecostalism, and the missionaries who were an integral part of it, were products of the convergence of several forces in Christianity at the turn of the century . Some of these forces were a reaction against the secularization and institutionalization of largely middle-class Protestant denominational churches.
