Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from A Manual of Licensing Legislation and Compensation The sale of wine was first regulated in the following year by the Act 7 Ed. VI. C. 5, by which the retail sale was permitted in cities, boroughs, towns corporate, port towns, and market towns, and then only under appointment from the corporation, or, where there was no corporation, from the justices of the peace. The number of houses to be licensed was limited to 40 in the City of London, 8 in York, 6 in Bristol, 4 or 3 in eighteen other places, and 2 elsewhere. These licences were for the sale of wine to be consumed off the premises only, consumption on the premises being prohibited. This statute is worthy of note, not only as fixing the number of houses allowed, but also as being the earliest attempt to place the sale of liquors for consumption off the premises (which has usually been subject to an excise licence only) under the control of the justices. It seems, however, not to have been regularly enforced, and soon became obsolete. The regulations drawn up by the justices under the Act of 5 6 Ed. VI. Tended to acquire a more or less settled form, and the conditions commonly in use were embodied in a royal proclamation by James I. In 1618. This form provided that the alehouse-keeper should not during the continuance of his licence permit unlawful games to be played in his house, that he should close the house during the hours of divine service on Sunday, that he should give the names of all strangers staying in the house for more than a night to the constable, that he should not...
