Forgotten Books. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 22 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.1in. Excerpt from The War in March: The German promise of a great offensive in the West was slow to materialise. Weeks passed, fine weather held good, the enemy divisions still came from the East in a steady trickle until it was estimated that he had 190 in line and in reserve in France and Flanders; but it was not until the morning of March 21st that the great attack was launched against the British armies on a fifty mile front, between the Scarpe and the Oise. At the time of writing the exact purpose of the German offensive has not been disclosed, and prophesy is impossible. Its scope, however, is manifest from the fact that forty German divisions were identified in the first days action. Over wide areas of the British and French fronts the enemy had already shown a great energy in raiding, but only on one occasion did this raiding burst out into action of larger proportions.
