Lane, of Indiana, in the Senate of the United States, Thursday, February 8, 1866 We have been at war for four years. The war has temporarily ceased; at least, there is no conflict of arms; and the question now is, who have triumphed, the Government of the United states or the rebels in arms? If you establish the proposition that the people of the United States have triumphed, they, exercising the rights of war over a conquered population, have a right to dictate and fix the terms of restoration, and establish the relations which should exist hereafter between these rebel States, so-called, and the Government of the United States. It seems to me that counsel has been darkened on this subject in the statement of the question. A portion of the people and of the Senate believe that these States are yet in the Union; another portion believe that these States arc yet out of the Union; and the difficulty of dealing with that question is that both are right and both are wrong. Territorially these States are in the Union; the communities in these rebel States are in the Union; their citizens are citizens of these United States. Our national boundaries are fixed by treaties with Great Britain, Spain, France, and Mexico, and all the territory comprised within these boundaries belongs to the United States; every citizen is a citizen of the United States. But the practical question is, whether these citizens are now, at this time, in such a relation to the Government of the United States as to be entitled to participate in the legislation of the...
