Not illustrated. 18 Excerpt: . . . be back in about an hour, and if you have not killed one by that time, I will help you to get one. So I told my wife to put away the things whilst I loaded my rifle, which, as soon as she had done, she took my arm, and we walked down to the deer. They laid under a clump of trees as the day was very hot. My wife and I were dressed in black, as she had lately buried her only sister. We put them up and moved them about so as to get a fine buck out clear, and as soon as I had a good chance I shot at him and knocked him down. A man happened to be coming down the public path at the time whom I sent to the house for a scratch, which, as soon as he had fetched, we took him home and dressed him, and when all was done, I went into the house and sat down as before. When the Duke came back and had changed his horse and coat, he said, Come, Dale, we must have a buck I said, I have killed one, my lord. He said, Why have you not dressed him then V I said, I have done all. The Duke then went to look at him and was very pleased, and said he never knew one killed and dressed so quickly before. The deer went back and laid...
