Excerpt from Speech of Mr. Hudson, of Massachusetts, on the Cost of the War and Finances of the Country: Delivered in the House of Representatives of the U. States, February 15, 1848 Mr. Hudson, of Massachusetts, next obtained the floor. He said that the present condition of our country is well calculated to fill the mind with the most serious apprehensions. We are, said he, in the midst of a war - a war which a majority of this House have declared to have been unnecessarily and unconstitutionally commenced by the Executive. War in itself is at all times a great calamity; but when it is commenced without just cause, and is prosecuted for the unholy purpose of conquest, it becomes a crime of the deep est dye. Such, I em persuaded, is the character of the war in which we are now engaged. It has already sent to a premature grave many thousands of our citizens, involved us in a heavy national debt, filled our people with a thirst for conquest, degraded us in the eyes of every civilized nation, and brought us to a point where the consummation of our ambitious designs may -prove the prelude of internal dissensions, more to be dreaded than foreign war itself. I shall not, at this time, Mr. Chairman, attempt an examination of the causes of this unnatural, and, as I believe, iniquitous war. This has been done, and ably done, by others. After the repeated exhibitions of the facts in the case, the question can hardly be considered an Open one. It has been demonstrated, again and again, that the Texas we annexed was revolutionary Texas, and hence that her boundary was marked by...
