After residing in Manchester, Raymond, and Nottingham, she came to Lee in 1919 as the bride of Charles Piper, a lifelong local resident and recently returned veteran of World War I. Lee was then a small rural community of 475 people. Annie soon became involved in the local concerns of her new town and in 1931 was elected to the Lee School Board, where she served three terms. During these years of the Great Depression, Annie and her two colleagues on the board were responsible for overseeing the education of some 60 students grades one through eight - in three one-room schoolhouses located in North, Center, and South Lee. In 1935 the voters approved a budget for the district of - half of which was earmarked to pay the salaries of four teachers. Annie was especially pleased when her...
