H. Cox, entitled Quakerism not Christianity, c. The author of the review, under the appearance, and perhaps with the intention of candour and liberality, has held up the Society of Friends, and the doctrines they profess, in a very unfavourable light. To those who are acquainted with the general character of Friends, or have taken the pains to understand their doctrines, and compare them with the testimony of Scripture, very little need be said, to show the weakness as well as the injustice of the attack, both of the author and his reviewer. If we could be assured that the readers of those productions would follow the example of the noble Bereans, and examine diligently with unbiassed minds, whether...
