RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 68 pages. Original publisher: Aberdeen Proving Ground, MD : Army Research Laboratory, 2007 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)314175759 Subject: Global Positioning System. Excerpt: . . . Tactile systems have also been developed and demonstrated effective for navigation situations. Dobbins and Samways (2002) used one tactor (i. e. , a vibrotactile display element) on each wrist to effectively display a virtual corridor in a maritime navigation setting. Maritime navigation often occurs in situations of poor visibility (e. g. , night operations, fog, etc.) and high craft motion (e. g. , high levels of shock and vibration). The Navigation Tactile Interface System (NTIS) was demonstrated to aid navigation at speeds as fast as 70 knots and was used for the establishment of the blind world water speed record. The NTIS constructs a virtual corridor from one waypoint to the next. Waypoint location and corridor width are pre-programmed. Tactors were programmed to provide cues regarding whether the navigator should veer left or right in order to stay on course. It was determined that the tactile system was a viable alternative and an effective augment to visual display and was effective, regardless of high vibrations from the high-speed power boats. Dobbins and Samways (2002) also reported application of the TSAS, integrated with the Swimmer In-shore Navigation System (SINS) to aid diver navigation. The divers navigated a triangular course in good visibility, using visual or tactile cues. Both types of cues were effective; however, divers expressed preference for the tactile system. In another demonstration of tactile cues for navigation, Van Erp and van Veen (2004) demonstrated that tactors in a drivers seat can be used to successfully navigate a...
