The pilewort is attacked by another fungus besides the JEcidium, and as it is almost sure to attract the notice of those who may be looking for the cluster-cups, it should not be passed without remark. It is called the pilewort rust, Uromyeea Ficarue, and appears as a purplish brown powder bursting through the epidermis. The spores are small, one-celled, and stalked. Besides the brown rust there is also a white rust so common that it must have been noticed by moBt of us. It attacks cruciferous plants, and is seen very generally on the leaves and stalk of the shepherd s purse, Capsella Bursa-pastoris. It makes the plant look as if it had been splashed over with whitewash, and as the threads of the fungus gradually work their way among the tissues of the plant, they cause it to become swollen and distorted, so that plants attacked by this fungus present a very sickly and sorry appearance. It is called the Cystopus candidu. One of the most destructive of the fungi that attack living plants is the potato mould, which is the cause of the disease that does so much damage to this most important vegetable. The fungus is called Peronospora infestan. Fig. 3. Maple Blight--Uneinula bieornii. Lower figures--ends of appendages and spores. The last...
