Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Religion of the Sun: A Posthumous Poem, of Thomas Paine, With a Preface Start not, ye Muses! At the introduction of a votary who has been appointed to have turned the world upside down! He sings upon his high toned lyre, But Fancy's Sketch. What, tho he be the avowed Author of Rebellion, even in Apollo's realms? Yet, fear ye not, shy Damsels! Dotted smiles at the rhapsodies of this son of eccentricity, and, impartial, pours the genial influence full into his bosom. List but to his song, and you will then acknowledge him; and at the pauses which all destructive Time has made, let the pure tear-drops of pity be dew your virgin cheeks, while the warm glowing sigh of compassion, in mellowing harmony, breathes, Alas!
