HORAE HEBRAICAE

RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 34 pages. Dimensions: 9.7in. x 7.4in. x 0.1in. This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1868 edition. Excerpt: . . . inerte. It is worth inquiring whether something analogous to this does not take place in Hebrew, in such words as, 5n, 2an, wen, n: : , and, possibly, mi. One more suggestion relative to negative particles in connexion with monosyllabic roots is made with more hesitation, for it is more contrary to the general usage of language; nevertheless there is found in English something corresponding when the word less, at the end of compound, denotes the deprivation of the quality expressed by the word with which it is compounded, as heartless, graceless, and c. Such a way of marking negation or privation seems to have found a place in Hebrew compounds, at least Bumouf. in the sense of, to free, i. e. to unbind, the root being an fas, to bind, (Smiths Lat. Dict.). In Irish, ca not, and a kindred negative lurks in the Latin words, Clifill, celebs, cama; the last being equivalent to the French, dqeuner. there is a suspicion of it, and it is now merely suggested for further inquiring into. The privative aiformative in this case is denoted by the labial F added to the root with an accompanying vowel. Examples of its possible use may be found in FJl, to be profane (graceless) WU, to uncover, make bare. The root in the former being H, grace, and in the latter ItlIDD base of HOD, to cover. As to the possible explanation of such force in the terminal, see...
