Not illustrated. 1887 Excerpt: .poor folks; it is wonderful how one is able to feel for an unfortunate neighbour when the time comes for rowing in the same boat. Howard has offered to pay my cricketing subscription, as I would not ask my father for it just now, but I declined, for I will not get into debt. The girls, I know, are hard up, and so I shall not trouble any one. My chum s offer is very kind, but though I must confess to having shed some tears--not crocodile s either--over the disappointment, I shall be firm and stick to my principles. Everything is very prosy and dull just now, and I long to break bounds, and go in for a row, by way of a change. That won t do, however, so I must grin and bear my lot. I was reading some lines to-day that cheered me a little, and I ll pop them down so as to be able to refer to them. Here they are, --- Be in earnest, boys, be earnest, Work with willing voice and pen; There is much that wants improving, Room for earnest, noble men. I mean to work with my pen, for that is the greatest ambition I have; and with regard to the improving, why there is plenty of need for it in myself before I begin to teach others. I think this is the way to become a noble man--like my father, for instance. Last week I...
