Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1906 edition. Excerpt: . chapter xii A day among the game Let me now endeavour to place before my readers as realistic a description as possible of a day with the game. I do not mean among the more exotic forms, such as elephants, rhinoceroses, or buffaloes, but the varieties which any sportsman of average activity may hope to find in the course of an ordinary day's sport. It is the hour of dawn, and a dim light comes from a pale saffron, easterly flush. Faint stars are growing fainter. The dew from the big mopani tree, under which the tent is pitched, falls in resounding drops on the moisture-tightened canvas. The crickets are still shrilling in the neighbouring high grass, and it is cold--very cold. Khaki knee-breeches and hunting shirt feel chilly to the skin, and the warm ulster, which was so comfortable last night, is hastily put on whilst boots are laced and gaiters buttoned. Outside the tent, and in the servant's msassa, there is an air of subdued bustle, whilst low voices come from the shelter which the carriers have made for themselves, and where they are sitting round heaps of glowing embers, blankets over shoulders and knees touching chins. A shelter consisting of a grass roof roughly thrown upon a hastily constructed framework of branches. A table hastily set before the door of the tent contains a pot of coffee or chocolate, also a couple of thick slices of Westphalian sausage,...
