Not illustrated. 1908 Excerpt: .for the society and placing them before the public, have not fully accomplished their mission. The bait should be so manipulated as to favor the additional feature of short, frequent, private interviews between the youngsters (calling sometimes singly, sometimes in parties) and their adult friend. Of course, in bringing about these tete-a-tete interviews, a magnetic worker needs no attractions. Or, rather, he can have plenty of such interviews in virtue of a single and ever-operative attraction, the charm of his own personality. Consequently, the following recommendations are made not for organizers of personal drawing power but in the interests of the ordinarily equipped, willing workers who, as the writer everywhere contends, can easily accomplish all that boy-care demands. Now leaders devoid of personal winsomeness must draw visitors in a businesslike way and just as the storekeepers draw them, by contriving to have on hand things in which his public is interested. Hence, throughout these pages attractions, as well The Host s Opportunities 197 as other features of the society, are proposed under forms calculated to bring individual youngsters as often as possible in quest of their patron.1 I would begin by encouraging such visits even in friends as yet too young for the society. Possibly nothing that can be devised promotes such early advances better than does the proposed expedient of a physical criterion for membership. During a considerable period before managing to meet this requirement fully, the applicant is consciously under its spell and is...
