Excerpt from Letters From the Far East: Notes of a Visit to China, Korea and Japan, 1915-1916 Another twenty-four hours and we shall be once more in the fair Land of the Rising Sun, just one month after leaving New York, a month devoted to the journey across the continent and the seven teen days voyage on the placid Pacific, varied by one short week in San Francisco. Except for the fact that after our departure from Chicago on a Friday the thirteenth we had the Pullman almost entirely to ourselves, the long railway journey was in no wise unusual. Once in San Francisco, we found plenty to amuse us in the panama-pacino Exposition, a meeting of the Associated Harvard Clubs and a renewal of our eeting acquaintance with the streets and Shops of the city; the day of sailing came all too soon. We thoroughly enjoyed the Exposition, and found the buildings far more agreeable to the eye than we had expected; probably the colors had toned down considerably since the Opening days, when they were criticized by some as garish and overdone. Of the foreign exhibits, the Japanese seemed to me the most complete and artistic; of the buildings, the French and Italian and one or two State headquar ters the most tasteful. The wretched war had, of course, much to do with the paucity of the displays from the European countries, which indeed, underthe circumstances, were most creditable. To be quite frank, I found the interiors Of the great exhib itiou halls far less to my liking than the architectural beauties of some Of the towers, colonnades and courts and the loveliness of the gardens with their masses...
