

A Rough Deliverance: Collected Poems 1983-2013 (Paperback)

By Nancy Bevilaqua

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2013. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .How the night parades. How wretched all the milky stars a million years erupting, the dry cicadas, silent, sliding among leaves, this glass I said I wouldn't have. Here's to a rough deliverance, the fire in the chest. A collection of poems from the author of Holding Breath: A Memoir of AIDS Wildfire Days, A Rough Deliverance begins with poems the author wrote as an ambitious and conflicted 22-year old college student just learning to navigate her life on her own, a young woman who wanted nothing more than to be a famous poet, and attended NYU's graduate poetry program in order to try to do that. It closes with poems written by a woman thirty years older--in some ways very different, in some ways very much the same, perhaps wiser and perhaps not. She is not a famous poet, but she is someone who has loved deeply, witnessed the ravages of an epidemic from the front lines, grieved, traveled extensively, made terrible choices and perfect ones, over-indulged and abstained, raised a wonderful son, wrestled with anger...
