Her aunt Tais, a tall, slight girl of twelve, with a very long neck and small head, sat on the floor opposite her brother, and laughed merrily at every fresh attack of little Ta, and at the frequent harmless falls that were the result of her efforts. At the sight of Vera, Tais sprung to her feet, and a look of self-reproach succeeded to her gaiety. Oh! Vera, have you heard anything? Yes, said Vera, trying to speak calmly, that Nadine is not to be found, and that Aimee is gone also! H Aimee gone also! cried both her auditors, coming near to her, and taking each a hand with looks of such sympathy that Vera could scarcely nerve herself to continue- I have sent to the district police to describe Nadine, and have ordered our villages to be searched for Aimee. She cannot have gone far; for she was here this morning. Yes, she was here, playing with Ta, very early. She had dressed herself up in some odd costume, to amuse Ta, as she said; but she was crying so much all the time about Nadine, that Ta began to cry also. And then she went away, saying that it was very hard Ta should cry when she had come on purpose to amuse her; and the nurse told her that it was because she cried, and that Ta was too little to enter...
