DOTTY DIMPLE AT HER GRANDMOTHERS

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 54 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.1in.DOTTYS PIN-MONEY Everything was very fresh and beautiful one morning in May, as if God had just made the world. The new grass had begun to grow, and the fields were dotted over with short, golden-topped dandelions. The three Parlin children had come to their grandmothers much earlier in the season than usual; and now on this bright Sabbath morning they were going to church. Dotty Dimple, otherwise Alice, thought the fields looked like her Aunt Marias green velvet toilet-cushion stuck full of pins. The spiders had spread their gauzy webs over the grass, and the dew upon them sparkled in the sunshine like jewels. Such nice tablecloths as they would have made for the fairies, thought Dotty, if there only were any fairies. The world is ever so much handsomer than it was a week ago, said Prudy, pointing towards the far-off hills. Id like to be on that mountain, and just put my hand out and touch the sky. That largest pick, said Dotty, is Mount Blue. Its covered with blueberries, and thats why its so blue. Who told you that asked Susy, smiling. It isnt time yet for blueberries; and if it was, we couldnt see them forty miles off without a telescope. Jennie Vance told me, said Dotty; and she ought to know, for her father is the judge. By this time the children had reached the church, and were waiting on the steps for the rest of the family. It was pleasant to watch the people coming from up and down the street, looking so neat and peaceful. But when Jennie Vance drew near with her new summer silk and the elegant feather in her...
