Vacancies occur when an incumbent Senator leaves office prematurely for any reason; they may be caused by death or resignation of the incumbent, by expulsion or declination (refusal to serve), or by refusal of the Senate to seat a Senator-elect or -designate. This report provides information on current vacancies in the Senate, the constitutional origins of the Senate vacancy clause, the appointment process by which most vacancies are filled, and related contemporary issues. It will be revised and updated to reflect current developments in vacancies, appointments, and special elections. Two Senate vacancies occurred late in the 112th Congress by separate events, due to resignation of one incumbent Senator, and the death of a second. A third vacancy occurred early in the 113th Congress, due to the resignation of an incumbent Senator. The details are provided below, in chronological order. On December 6, 2012, Senator Jim DeMint, of South Carolina, announced he would resign from the Senate to assume the position of President of The Heritage Foundation. On December 17, South Carolina Governor Nikki Haley announced she would appoint Representative Tim Scott to serve in his place until the vacancy is filled by a special election in 2014. The winner of the special election will serve until the term expires in 2016. Senator DeMint resigned effective January 1, 2013, and Senator Scott was sworn in on January 3.
