Tap one tree on north and south sides and compare sap-flow. Tap other trees with one hole Only. 2. Observing sap-flow from natural wounds, from tap pings of birds, from gnawings of animals and from broken green boughs and twigs. 3. Observing the animals that take advantage of the sapflow. Birds and animals may be seen feeding at their own tappings. If there be snow on the ground, the tracks of animals about the places where sap flows down the trunks to the ground will tell of nocturnal visitors that have a sweet toot. Insects will be found swarming in the sunshine to every flowing wound: bees and flies and beetles of many Sorts. These may be picked up in a cyanide bottle. The gathering of the sap from the pails during the entire period of flow, and the evaporation...
